These sinister souls
have nothing to fear...
except FEAR, HERSELF...
And BLACKHAWK!

Allow us to introduce you to this young lady -- known by the name of FEAR!

HOW DO YOU DO?

Remarkable person, FEAR... a busy one, too!

WILL YOU EXCUSE ME? I'VE A LITTLE BUSINESS TO TRANSACT!

Someone else is coming toward her -- I wonder if he truly wants to meet her --

WHY, JOBANN! WHAT A PLEASANT SURPRISE!

FEAR!
NO -- NO -- NO --

YES!

RATATATATATAT!

That gives you an idea of what sort of young lady FEAR is!

DO YOU MEAN THAT YOU WATCHED WHAT I DID? BUT YOU WOULDN'T TELL ANYONE --

THAT MIGHT BE EMBARRASSING -- EVEN DISASTROUS -- TO YOU!

The police of the world are interested! Likewise...

I ASKED YOU TO CALL, BLACKHAWK, BECAUSE THIS SORT OF CASE IS YOUR SPECIALTY!

YOU HONOR ME, YOUR EXCELLENCY! BUT I KNOW ONLY A LITTLE OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES!

DURING THE YEARS OF TURMOIL THAT HAVE RACKED THE WORLD, CERTAIN SHREWD MEN WERE ABLE TO MAKE FORTUNES FROM CRIME WITHOUT HINDRANCE! WE KNOW VERY LITTLE ABOUT WHO THEY WERE...

NOT ENOUGH TO CONVICT! BUT WASN'T ONE CRIME CHIEF CONVICTED AND EXECUTED?

YOU MEAN RENARR, WHOM WITNESSES SAY PLANNED THE ASSASSINATION OF A HIGH COMMISSIONER? WE COULD NOT MAKE SURE, BUT WE THINK HIS PARTNERS WERE BAX, GINKEL, PROFESSOR NITHAR, JOBANN ---

JOBANN'S THE MAN WHO WAS MURDERED! WHAT ABOUT THE OTHERS?

THEY HAVE FLED -- VANISHED! AN UNDER-WORLD RUMOR SAYS THEY HEADED FOR THE MOUNTAINS OF ZORANIA!

AND IT WOULD NOT BE GOOD DIPLOMACY FOR POLICE TO INVAD E THAT LITTLE COUNTRY, EH?

RIGHT! BUT THE BLACKHAWKS --- UNOFFICIAL GUARDIANS OF JUSTICE --- HAVE BEEN ABLE TO GO EVERYWHERE!

THEN WE'LL GO TO ZORANIA, YOUR EXCELLENCY, AND LEARN WHAT IT'S ALL ABOUT!

PARBLEAU, WE GO RUSTY WITHOUT ACTION! HENDRICKSON EES GAINING WEIGHT --- OLAF SLEEPS ALL DAY --- EVEN I, ANDRE, YAWN ---

STOP YAWNING AND WARM UP THE PLANES! WE'RE TAKING A TRIP TO THE MOUNTAINS!

ZORANIA!
I HOPE THERE'S SOMETHING THERE TO
LIMBER US UP!

In Zorania ---

WHAT NEWS,
BAX?

GINKEL--
PROFESSOR--
THE BLACKHAWKS
HAVE ARRIVED AT THE AIRPORT!

I THOUGHT WE WOULD BE CLEAR
OF THE LAW
HERE!

WHAT WE HIDE
FROM IS WORSE
THAN THE LAW,
PROFESSOR!
PERHAPS DEALING WITH THE BLACKHAWKS WILL KEEP US IN TRAINING FOR A WORSE
STRUGGLE!

WHAT CAN BE WORSE THAN THE BLACKHAWKS,
GINKEL?

WE CANNOT BE SURE, BAX!
WAITER!

A whispered conference...

YES, YES --- ALL WAITERS IN ZORANIA ARE REASONABLE MEN --AND APPRECIATIVE OF THE
RICH GIFTS YOU PROMISE!

GO, THEN,
AND DO WHAT I PAID YOU FOR!

Elsewhere, the BLACKHAWKS order a hearty meal ---

HOW GOOD EVERYTHING
LOOKS! THERE SEEMS TO BE NO STARVATION
IN ZORANIA!

EXCEPT WITH THIS
STRAY DOG! HERE, PUP, HAVE A BITE!

BLACKHAWK,
LOOK! THAT POOR DOG---
DYING---

THIS FOOD IS POISONED!

CHOO CHOO

I'D BE WILLING TO HANDLE THE DEAL FOR SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS! BUT THEN YOU'RE NOT THE FARM TYPE! YOU'RE SO SOPHISTICATED!

OH, MR. DEVINE, I'M NOT REALLY!

OKAY, CHOO, HERE'S THE PITCH! A TALENT SCOUT IS SEARCHING LOCUST VALLEY FOR THE TYPICAL FARM ---

LOCUST VALLEY? WHY, THAT'S WHERE CHERRY'S UNCLE FRED LIVES! OH, BOY!

KEEP ON THE BEAM, BILL! I'LL SEE YOU UP THERE!

Sometime later ---

WHEW! THIS FARM WORK IS HARD!

I THINK CHOO CHOO HAD THE RIGHT IDEA!

YOU'RE NOT KIDDING, CHUM!

CHOO CHOO! THIS IS WONDERFUL!

YES, I'VE DECIDED THE FARM IS THE BEST PLACE, AFTER ALL!

KICKBACK

LEW GULLIVER galloped along the mountain trail with a song bubbling on his lips. Lew was happy. It was a beautiful day, like most of the days in Arizona. The sun flamed in a sky of coppery clouds. Far up from the trail Lew could see several ancient cliff dwellings where once people had lived in America's dim past.

Lew's huge sombrero suddenly was jerked from his head and went sailing in the breeze. Then he heard the sharp crack of a high powered rifle. His horse reared, almost unseating him. Lew leaped from the saddle and crouched behind a handy rock. Whoever was shooting at him had come mighty close. The neat little hole in the crown of his Stetson attested to that.

Lew watched carefully from around the rock, but the shot was not repeated. Who the dickens was trying to dry-gulch him? Lew wondered. He had no enemies that he knew about. He was a stranger in this neighborhood. The town he was approaching — Mule Creek — was new to him. Lew came from across the mountain range, more than a hundred miles distant. He was going to see a man in Mule Creek on business.

After another moment, Lew put on his hat and leaped into the saddle. He wasted no time getting away from that vicinity. The trail narrowed and Lew tore along over it, uncertain as to what was his best course. He didn't like the idea of someone taking pot shots at him.

Nothing more happened, and soon Lew was riding along the single dusty street of Mule Creek. He watched for a certain sign reading, JED STEEBINS, ATTY. On both sides of the street there were stores, saloons, gambling places, all of them built with high false fronts such as characterized the Old West architecture.

He reined up when he had reached the end of the street. He hadn't seen the sign he was looking for. Two other lawyers' signs he had noticed, however.

Lew rode up in front of the sheriff's office and dismounted. A young deputy leaned back in a chair, with his booted feet on the rail of the little porch rail. He eyed Lew casually.

"Hiya," said Lew. "Sheriff about?"

The deputy jerked a stubby thumb over his shoulder. "In there, I reckon," he said unconversationally.

Lew stepped through the screen door and confronted a heavy, beefy man with a great star on his breast.

"Pardon me, sir," Lew began. "Do you happen to know Jed Steebins, the lawman?"

"Yeah," said the sheriff, without taking the huge cigar from his mouth. "What about him?"

"I came to town to see him, but I couldn't find his office. Thought mebbe you'd know—"

"He ain't got an office," the sheriff bit off. "Leastways not no more. He cashed in his chips."

Lew gulped. "You mean—he's dead?"

"Thass right."

"Hm," said Lew. "I just had a letter from him a few days ago. He said somebody hereabouts was interested in buying some land I own."

"Got plugged th' other night cut to Toliver's place," the sheriff went on. "Who did you say you was?"

"I didn't," Lew told him. "I'm Lew Gulliver, from over Rock Ridge way."

The sheriff took his cigar from his mouth and stared at Lew. "You Lew Gulliver?"

Lew nodded.

The sheriff got up. "Think I know the fellow who wants to make you an offer. Come with me an' I'll take you up to his office." The sheriff came around the desk and went out the door. Lew followed.

The sheriff forked a mangy cayuse standing at the hitching rail, and Lew mounted his big roan.

"Far?" asked Lew.

"Couple miles." The sheriff spoke to his horse and cantered off.

They rode out of town and turned up a winding canyon. Towering mountains lifted craggy heads high above the trail. They rode along in silence for a mile. Then the sheriff suddenly said, "Know Henry Kells?"

"Never heard of him."

"Kells wants to start a cow spread hereabouts," went on the sheriff. "He likes the looks of your land. Got plenty money, Kells has."

"But my land," said Lew. "Gosh, it ain't worth much. No grazing. Water only three months out of the year. I'd think Mr. Kells could do a lot better."

"Sure. So do I. But Kells likes your place so there you be. Not far now."

Lew pondered the thing. Why anybody would want that burned patch of land he couldn't figure. But then it was none of his business. If the man wanted to buy it, okay. Lew didn't want it. He felt he would accept any fair offer.

At that moment Lew's hat sailed off his head and the spang of a rifle sounded. Lew jumped for some bushes, as did the sheriff. The latter had his 45 out and was scanning the rugged terrain with a scowl.

"Now, what the devil" he said. "Th' ornery varmint musta meant you, all right. Yer hat got it plumb center."

"For the second time today," Lew said. He held out the hat, indicating the two holes in the crown.

The sheriff snorted. "Must have it in fer ya, bub. Where did the other shot come from?"

Lew told him. One thing Lew didn't tell, however: thinking over the two bullet holes, he decided that the man behind the rifle knew what he was doing—that if he had wanted actually to shoot him, he could have done so. Such shooting was too good to be taken as chance. But what did it mean?

They rode up a dusty lane and dismounted before a dilapidated ranch house.

Kells was a tall, thin man with a dry, raspy voice. He came right to the point.

"I'm glad you come out, Mr. Gulliver," he told Lew. "Yeah, I aim to start a spread here and I like the lay of that parcel of land. I'm ready to make you an offer."

Lew nodded. "Well, what had you in mind, Mr. Kells? I don't know what it's worth."

"Not much as she lays," Kells said. "But I figger with irrigation, which will cost a pretty penny—"

The window in the grubby little office was smashed by a bullet. The lead sang overhead and buried itself in the plaster behind Kells' rolltop desk. All three men jumped to their feet.

Kells cursed. "Who the heck's shootin'?" he yelled. He ran to the porch with a gun in his hand. Lew sat down again and waited till Kells had returned.

What had happened again. He could not make any deal until he found out what this mystery intended.

Lew made some lame excuse about thinking the matter over and he rode off with the sheriff.

He had seen a covert wink pass between the two.

Lew put up at the Steer Horn Hotel that night, after a hearty meal of ham and eggs. He had just pulled the blanket up when a sly tap on his window brought him up and reaching for his six-gun.

"Ssh!" said a strange voice. "I'm a friend. I'll come in. I have something important to tell you."

"Come on, but no monkey business," said Lew. "I got you covered."

The man entered the room silently. Lew lit a light. He got a jolt. The man was an Indian.

"My name's Jake Rocket," the redskin said. "I shot holes in your hat—and smashed window in Kells' office. I didn't want you to sell your land."

"Well, Jake, you're certainly frank about the thing. Why don't you want me to sell out?"

"You come with me and I show you, Lew," said the Indian. "I go out window again and meet you out front in five minutes, huh?"

"Sure," Lew replied. The whole thing seemed crazy, but he'd follow it through. Nothing else to do. The Indian had some reason for him not to sell worthless land.

Lew was outside in three minutes and the Indian glided away silently in front of him, after whispering, "No talk."

At the edge of town the Indian pointed out two saddled horses. They mounted and the Indian led the way through the darkness. The moon had not risen.

Two miles of an easy canter and they reined up at the eastern boundary of Lew's land.

"We walk from here," Jake said.

A low rocky range ran across Lew's land and here at its base Jake halted. The moon was just appearing and it was consequently lighter now. Jake pointed to some newly turned earth.

"Gold mine," he said laconically.

"Gold!" cried Lew. "So Jed

Stebbins found gold. That is why he wrote me to come at once."

Jake said, "No, Jed no find gold. Not real mine. He find 'salted' earth. Kells plant gold here to fool rich man from East so he'll buy land for much money."

"So that's the reason Kells wants to buy, so he can make a killing on a bum claim!"

"That's right, Lew. Kells shot Jed. Jed my friend. You Jed's friend, too." Jake lapsed into Indian talk.

Lew held out his hand. "Thanks, Jake. You bet I'm your friend. We'll fix Kells! So that ornery coyote shot Jed?"

Jake nodded, pointed to a low mound a few feet away. "Buried there." Jake picked up a shovel and walked toward the new grave. "You go back hotel. I have job. See you manana."

Lew rode back to town, leaving the Indian's horse where he'd found it. He knew what Jake meant to do—rebury Jed Stebbins in the mine diggings, where Kells and the sheriff would find it when they showed the crooked mine to the Eastern man.

There was one difference in the plans, however, which Jake had sensed Lew would know, as he'd known Lew would understand the reburying deal. Jake knew that he—Lew—would tell the Easterner, who was staying at the same hotel, all about the proposed rooking he was in for. The Indian knew, too, that Lew would tell the story to enough people to convict Kells.

And that's exactly what Lew did do, the very next day. Somehow Kells got wind of it and left town without seeing the Eastern man. But the sheriff, just as guilty as Kells, had to tack up notices of reward for the apprehension of Kells, wanted for the murder of Jed Stebbins.

Retribution works in strange ways.
